

Zainab Abubakar.

Self preference..

Working on this project has been a valuable learning experience that helped me grow both academically and personally. At the beginning, I was scared, overwhelmed and anxious but also eager to work on something by myself. As the project progressed, I learned the importance of planning, group work, setting deadlines, and breaking tasks into smaller steps. This allowed me to stay focused and determined to show what I'm capable of.

One of the key lessons I gained was the value of collaboration and feedback. Engaging with peers provided me with fresh perspectives and constructive criticism, which improved the quality of my work. I also realized the importance of adaptability, as I had to adjust my initial approach when certain ideas did not work as expected.

The project also strengthened my research, problem-solving, and communication skills. I became more confident in presenting the demo of the project (the video) as I was one of the documenters and reflecting critically on the outcomes. Although I faced challenges, such as time pressure and under confidence, I learned to be resilient and resourceful.

Overall, this project not only enhanced my knowledge of the project but also improved my ability to manage tasks, work independently, work with other people and also to manage them, and think critically—skills I will carry into future endeavors.